would take 24 to 48 hours.

Harvard Vanguard Medical Associates in Braintree confirmed that a patient had presented himself at their practice on Sunday afternoon complaining of headache and muscle aches.

The building was briefly closed, but was cleared by the State Department of Public Health to reopen for usual business, according to a Harvard Vanguard statement.

Earlier this month, Gov. Deval Patrick said during an interview with WGBH Radio the state was "well-prepared" to deal with the disease.

But not everyone has agreed with the governor.

The state's largest nurses union has said Massachusetts hospitals are wholly unprepared to deal with an Ebola

A man who has recently traveled to Liberia was isolated with Ebola-like symptoms at a Braintree clinic on Sunday and is currently being monitored at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center in Boston.

Dr. Kenneth Sands of Beth Israel told a news conference Sunday evening that the hospital's medical staff would assess the man's symptoms over the next few hours and would test him for Ebola if it was deemed appropriate. He said the results case, citing a lack of isolation rooms and training.

Earlier this month, David Schildmeier, spokesman for the Massachusetts Nurses Association, gave a grave assessment of the preparedness of hospitals in the state.

"We are absolutely not prepared," he said. "We don't have the number of isolation rooms required. The nurses have not been trained on the issue appropriately. The policies and procedures aren't in place. The staffing levels aren't in place."

He added, "They're working on it, but as usual it's not fast enough. It's a big concern."

Ebola has a fatality rate of around 50 percent.

Death threats made against local video game developer

Brianna Wu's company Giant Spacekat developed the game "Revolution 60," which has an all-female cast. / GIANT SPACEKAT

Arlington Police are investigating death threats made against a local video game developer.

Developer Brianna Wu, head of development at Giant Spacekat, was targeted by a Twitter account called "Kill Brianna Wu." Before the account was suspended, Wu was sent death threats about her and her husband. The person also threatened to rape Wu.

Police confirmed they have received a such a complaint.

Wu says she was among many targeted because she advocates for women's rights in the gaming industry.

"It's not a coincidence that every woman targeted by these people is an outspoken advocate of women in the field: Zoe Quinn, Leigh Alexander and Anita Sarkeesian and me," she said. "The women that are the most visible in advocating equality for women are the ones that are the biggest threat to them."

Misogyny and sexism are significant issues for gamers, she says. "They don't understand that the absence of privilege is not oppression."

"We desperately need the game industry to take the same steps Google is taking to hire more women, educate their employees on their unconscious biases and include women at levels of leadership," said Wu via email, adding that the industry is in the midst of a "very uncomfortable growing period."

"I think it's going to get worse before it gets better," she said. DANNY McDONALD

#gamergate

A scary trend

Wu is the latest victim of misogynistic threats in the gaming world.

Developer Zoe Quinn has also been subjected to online harassment and threats in recent months.

An August blog by Quinn's ex-boyfriend claimed that Quinn had a romantic relationship with a gaming journalist. That birthed the hashtag #gamergate, which was used by those concerned with journalistic ethics in the industry. That movement has recently been criticized for misogyny and sexism.

Authorities investigating Roxbury fire where man's body found

Authorities are investigating the cause of death of a man whose body was recovered from a house fire on Win-

Fire investigators have not yet determined the cause of the fire. The man has yet to

Lawyers: Tsarnaev
brother was a killer

A prosecution witness is prepared to testify that accused Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev knew his brother Tamerlan Tsarnaev was involved in a 2011 Waltham triple murder, defense attorneys said Friday in court papers.

Lawyers for Tsarnaev, who is due to stand trial in January, want prosecutors to hand over evidence linking the elder Tsarnaev to the slayings, in which three men were found with their throats slit and surrounded by bits of marijuana.

In the filing, attorneys suggest such evidence would show that Tamerlan Tsarnaev played a "dominant role" in organizing the deadly 2013 terror attack and may have coerced and intimidated his younger brother.

"Even the government has conceded that evidence concerning Tamerlan's participation in Waltham murders might be relevant if Dzhokhar were aware of it," the filing said.

Tamerlan was killed in a shootout with police three days after the bombing. Dzhokhar faces execution if convicted.

Ringmaster to host 'Built to Amaze'

TD Garden. The circus is coming to town.

American rodeo cowboy Andre McClain has tamed a lot of challenges in his day, but since last year he has lassoed himself a new life as Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey's first-ever equestrian ringmaster.

McClain, 37, will hit TD Garden this Wednesday along with 110 performers for the circus's newest show, "Built to Amaze."

"My job is to make sure you're enjoying yourself, and make sure the performers are energized and the customers are having a good time," said McClain, who met his wife Dani, a "Ringlette" dancer, at work.

"It was his voice that drew me to him," said Dani, 25, of the behind-the-scenes romance. "I imagined him waking up every morning with that voice saying, 'Good morning, baby.'"

The two call Kansas City, Missouri, home, but they spend the majority of the year traveling via train and performing around the United States.

McClain points to constant talent scouting and young producers as helping to keep the circus edgy and fires back at allegations by activists that circus animals live lives of hardship.

"These animals have unbelievable lives here," said McClain. "You can see the bond between the animals and the handlers."

Toddler first in Michigan to die from enterovirus

A 21-month-old girl is the first in the state of Michigan and second in the U.S. to die this year from a strain of the enterovirus that has infected more than 500 people across the nation, health officials said on Saturday.

Madeline Reid, who was stricken with Enterovirus D68, passed away late on Friday while being treated at the Children's Hospital of Michigan in Detroit, hospital officials said in a statement. "It is never easy to lose a child, and our entire health-care team at the Children's Hospital of Michigan is deeply saddened by this family's loss and mourns with them during this very difficult time," Rudolph Valentini, chief medical officer at the children's hospital, said.

Reid is the first in the state reported to have died from the virus, according to Michigan Department of Community Health. REUTERS

A Texas health worker has contracted Ebola after treating a Liberian who died of the disease at a Dallas hospital last week, raising concern about how U.S. medical guidelines aimed at stopping the spread of the disease were breached.

The infected worker, identified as a woman but not named as authorities announced the case on Sunday, is believed to be the first person to contract the disease in the United States.

Officials said the worker at the Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital had been wearing protective gear during treatment of Thomas Eric Duncan, a Libe-rarian who died on Wednesday after contracting Ebola in his home country before visiting the U.S.

The new case in Texas indicated a professional lapse that may have caused other health workers at the hospital to also be infected, said the director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. "We don't know what occurred in the care of the index patient, the original patient, in Dallas, but at some point there was a breach in protocol, and that breach in protocol resulted in this infection," CDC director Dr. Thomas Frieden said. REUTERS

One killed, more than 20 injured in Halloween hayride accident

A teenager was killed and two people remain in serious condition on Sunday after a Jeep towing a hay wagon packed with people lost control and careened down a hill, local authorities said.

All 22 passengers and the driver were injured in the accident late Saturday, Maine's Office of State Fire Marshal said in a statement.

A 17-year-old girl, who has not been identified, died from her injuries; two others, the jeep's driver and a teenage boy, remain in a serious condition, the statement said.

Authorities said the driver might have missed a turn as he hauled the Halloween hayride up a steep and rural road on the Gauntlet Haunted Night Ride at Harvest Hill Farms in Mechanic Falls, Maine.

Paltrow 'extremely unpleasant' at her own Obama fundraiser

In Los Angeles, the telltale sign of a President Obama fundraising visit has always been Roland Emmerich movie-level terrible traffic. But now we have another one: Gwyneth Paltrow smoking. The Goop guru hosted a DNC fundraiser at her Brentwood home last week, and apparently "was extremely unpleasant all day," a miffed staffer tells Radar Online. "She kept saying that she was pissed off because everything was running behind schedule. At around 10 a.m., she started drinking wine and she was smoking cigarettes all day," the — I'm just guessing here — former catering employee says, adding that any Paltrow run-ins only happened early in the day, before staff were sternly instructed to steer clear of her. "She was walking around on her phone and talking really loud to friends, letting everyone know that the president was coming to her house, as if everyone didn't know already." This never would've happened at a Martha Stewart-hosted Obama fundraiser.

Swift might have kids, if the paparazzi would leave her alone

Taylor Swift might have gone off the whole idea of having kids, and it's apparently all the paparazzi's fault. "I don't know if I'll have kids," she tells InStyle. "It's impossible not to picture certain scenarios and how you would try to convince them that they have a normal life when, inevitably, there will be strange men pointing giant cameras at them from the time they are babies." I'm guessing she's seen the kind of emotional toll that lifestyle has taken on her cat, Olivia Benson, who she pretty much takes absolutely everywhere.

He's all that and a Jedi, too

Interview. Freddie Prinze Jr. is playing his dream role: He's a hero in the new "Star Wars Rebels" cartoon.

Freddie Prinze Jr. is a little preoccupied trying to figure out cool things to say before you ice someone onscreen. "The best line ever before you kill somebody is from 'They Live' — 'Rowdy' Roddy Piper, he walks in the bank with the shotgun and says, 'I've come here to chew bubble gum and kick ass, and I'm all out of bubble gum,'" Prinze insists.

What does this have to do with "Star Wars Rebels," the new animated series that takes place between the events of Episodes III and IV? It's unclear, but Prinze has a few more relevant things to say about the franchise. "Star Wars is f—ing intergalactic. You can't find a franchise bigger," Prinze offers. It's probably best to just let Mr. Prinze express himself in his own words.

What it's like to play the first new Jedi in a long time: A lot of pressure. Everybody [in the cast] yesterday was like, "Yeah, I'm not feeling any pressure." I was like, man, I guess they didn't play lightsabers when they were kids, man. I feel it, you know what I mean? He's a Jedi, but he's untrained and he's cocky.

His lifelong history with the franchise: We always played lightsabers. The scar on my chin is from bending an aluminum flagpole back and forth until it snapped. My buddy Chris was Vader, I was Luke, I slid down a slide to get away from him, the flagpole hit first, knocked a chunk of my chin out. My mom freaked out, took me to the doctor, I had to get stitches, looked like I had a goatee at 8 years old.

That extended universe: I haven't read the books. Mainly because they weren't exact. They got a lot of liberty, and I'm more of a purist. I like things the way I like them, you know what I mean? I like my video games to have the boss at the end of it — and when it doesn't, you've failed.

Past films

How often people ask him about "Wing Commander": Never. I think people try to forget about it. [Laughs]. Although years ago I was at Comic Con ... and somebody came up to me with a Christopher Blair action figure, and I didn't even know they made them! ... I was like, "Aw, dude! You only came to see the movie because the 'Phantom Menace' trailer was attached to our movie."

Interview. "Jane" star on the show's diversity

The CW's new comedy "Jane the Virgin" tells the story of a 23-year-old Latina who has vowed celibacy until marriage — and then finds herself pregnant via artificial insemination after a mix-up at the gynecologist's office. Get past the quirkiness, and what makes this series notable is its celebration of Latino culture and its heroine Jane Villanueva, played by Gina Rodriguez.

"The way I grew up, I never saw myself onscreen," says the 29-year-old Chicago native. "I have two older sisters. One's an investment banker. The other one is an actor, and I never saw [Latinos] being played as investment bankers and actors."

So when the opportunity to star in Lifetime's "Devious Maids" came up, Rodriguez decided to pass. "I found it limiting," she says. "Being a maid is fantastic. I have many family members that have fed many of their families doing that job, but there are other stories that need to be told." AMBER RAY

First exposure

We ask guitarist Steve Gunn about his monumental firsts in music

What was the first song you learned to play?

"Money" by Pink Floyd. My first instrument was bass, at age 13, and I studied bass for about a year and then I switched over to guitar. I took lessons at a place called Todaro's (which is still around in Lansdowne, Pennsylvania), and I really studied that song and was really proud to have learned it. It's usually the first song I play if I pick up a bass. [Laughs]

What was the first show you went to?

Can I name two? Because the first one I'm not very proud of. But it was in 1990 or '91 and it was the Red Hot Chili Peppers. The Dead Milkmen opened, which was pretty amazing. ... We were in seventh grade and I remember I borrowed my sister's Joy Division T-shirt. I tape-recorded the show! My second show, just a few months later, which in retrospect was a better experience, was Danzig at this club called Pulsations in suburban Philly.

What was the first time you got onstage?

It was 1992 or 1993, and I was 15 and I played bass in a hard-core band called Reveal. This band was very rudimentary and barely had any sort of ability to speak of as musicians, but the music was loud and fast and I was kind of a substitute player for someone who couldn't make the trip, which at the time was monumental. I think we ended up playing three cities.

When was the first time you realized you could do this as a career?

I'm still having trouble figuring that out. But it's just been recently that I figured out that having another job would keep me from doing some of the opportunities that I'm being offered.

'Bad Blood' and good fortune

An optimist about this. Drummer Chris Wood talks about the day he met Dan Smith and soon after formed Bastille.

A few winters ago Chris Wood found himself going door-to-door in London, distributing flyers to offer his services as a drum teacher. It was, as he describes, a chance at getting out of working at a factory. Not many people called him, but one who did was singer Dan Smith.

"Basically, he rang me up, expecting me to be this 60-year-old man with a beard and he was asking if I had any drum students that would be good," recalls Wood, "and I was like, 'Nah, dude, I've only got two.'"

And so it goes that Wood offered his own services and became the drummer for Bastille. Though the band's success in the States has seemed rapid, there were years of struggle in their home country.

"In America, we were very fortunate in that we skipped some steps that most bands have to go through, like the stage where you are playing for 10 people at this bar, and then you drive 20 hours to play for 10 people at this other bar," he says, noting that by the time they had come to the U.S., their debut, "Bad Blood," was already a No. 1 hit in England. "In the U.K. though, we've seen it go from the very basic level where we were playing in pubs to where we are now."

What's next

'Half-finished mess'

When we speak with Wood, he's in the kitchen of a recording studio, where the members of Bastille have just completed seven days of recording for their follow-up to 2013's smash, "Bad Blood."

Wood says Bastille are tinkering with the formula that made them famous.

"We're using guitars for the very first time," he says. "It's really kind of just ideas right now. There are seven or eight at the moment at varying stages of completion. ... We'd love to play these songs live, but people would be like, 'Why are you playing this half-finished mess?'"

The herculean effort to get a heroic body

Plastic surgery. After a certain age, there's "100 percent certainty" that stars have had work done.

Between the uber-sculpted uniform of today's Batman to the bona fide god Thor having his own franchise, pressure is ramping up on Hollywood's leading men to look capable of the feats their characters perform. But while action stars talk up their grueling training and special diets, there may well be another kind of body-shaping professional whose work will go unacknowledged, says Dr. Brent Moelleken.

The Beverly Hills plastic surgeon took part in "Superhero Bodies," a new documentary by RealSelf, the online community for elective surgery, about how the demands of modern superhero roles are pushing actors to their physical limits — and the effect that's having on American men. The number of cosmetic procedures being performed on men has risen 273 percent in the last 16 years, according to the American Association of Aesthetic Plastic Surgery, with liposuction and ab-sculpting being the most common in 2013.

We asked Moelleken about where reality ends and fantasy begins.

How real is what's onscreen?

"Celebrities are a fantasy. And the fantasy is not just one individual; it's a company. These celebrities are companies — they have a whole entourage that depends on maintaining that image."

When does plastic surgery come into the picture?

"As people enter their 30s and definitely their 40s, and with 100 percent certainty their 50s, people have to get work done to continue to look youthful and vibrant and natural. It's inevitable."

Be realistic in your expectations.

"We can improve on what you have, but we can't make you into Hugh Jackman if you're not already close to Hugh Jackman to begin with."

For some stars like TV wrestlers, steroids and human growth hormone can also enter the picture. "They're willing to do anything to succeed, and that's an important lesson for people who are aspiring to have bodies like the superheroes: There may be a price to pay for that, in degeneration of your health, kidney problems, hip problems. Long-term steroid use is very hard on you."

Quoted

"The trend toward being ultra-fit is more so there than ever. It used to be a man could get by with a pot belly and graying sideburns and look distinguished. But now that's not enough — in order to make it in Hollywood, you have to be cut. That really mirrors what's going on in society."

Dr. Brent Moelleken

Fit to be broke

RealSelf estimates that the average man would need 11 procedures totaling $76,950 to achieve the superhero look, from the bulging quads to the strong chin:

• Forehead/hairline contouring: $6,000

• Filler in the cheeks: $950

• Chin implant: $4,050

• Deltoid implants: $8,000

• Bicep/tricep implants: $16,000

• Pec implants: $8,200

• Forearm implants: $5,000

• Abdominal etching: $5,900

• Quad implants: $8,000

• Calf implants: $7,100

• Butt implants: $7,750

Study. Feeling sad? Comforting yourself with food doesn't work

Put down that pint of ice cream, don't order that tub of fried chicken, and skip that impulse candy bar purchase at the register. Whatever you eat when feeling sad, it's not working.

"Individuals may be giving comfort food 'credit' for mood effects that would have occurred even in the absence of the comfort food," concluded a study published in the journal Health Psychology.

For "The Myth of Comfort Food" study, after filling out a questionnaire about their favorite ways to eat their feelings, subjects watched sad movies in two separate lab sessions. At the end of one session, they were offered their favorite comfort food; at the other, they were either given a neutral food or nothing.

That cookie won't make you happy — but it will mean an extra 20 minutes at the gym. / COLOURBOX

Researchers then measured any short-term mood changes.

Magical treat

"Harry Potter" fans won't be surprised to learn that there was one exception to the comfort food myth: Chocolate, whether given to participants before or after the sad films, made them feel better.

Their conclusion: "Although people believe that comfort foods provide them with mood benefits, comfort foods do not provide comfort beyond that of other foods (or no food)." Even those participants who believed that self-medicating with food would help were left no better off. EVA KIS

College application questions that will make you think

Application season. Some schools are getting creative with their essay prompts.

The college application essay is one of the only times during the admissions process where a student can showcase his or her personality. While many schools primarily focus their essay prompts on some variation of either "Why do you want to go to school here?" or "Tell us what makes you special," some admissions offices are getting quite creative with their essay prompts. We've compiled some of our favorites here.

University of Chicago

The University of Chicago has long been known for its rigorous course load and the strength of its philosophy department. Given that, it's no surprise that all of the school's application essay prompts encourage interested students to get a little philosophical. This option immediately stood out to us:

"Little pigs, French hens, a family of bears. Blind mice, musketeers, the Fates. Parts of an atom, laws of thought, a guideline for composition. Omne trium perfectum? Create your own group of threes, and describe why and how they fit together."

Honorable mention: Incoming students can also choose to answer the question, "Were pH an expression of personality, what would be your pH and why?"

Tufts University

Tufts is known for its offbeat application questions. Last year, prospective students were asked one of the great questions of our time: "What does #YOLO mean to you?" High school seniors interested in Tufts currently have the option to "Celebrate [their] nerdy side" in 200 to 250 words.

Honorable mention: "Sports, science and society are filled with rules, theories and laws like the Ninth Commandment, PV=nRT, Occam's Razor and The Law of Diminishing Returns. Three strikes and you're out.

Write a letter

Stanford University

Stanford University wants to get to know what students are like outside of the classroom. "Write a note to your future roommate that reveals something about you or that will help your roommate — and us — know you better," reads one prompt.

Honorable mention: "What matters to you and why?"

Students are encouraged to think outside the box with these questions. / DIGITAL VISION

In English, 'I' before 'E' except after 'C.' Warm air rises. Pick one and explain its significance to you." (Editor's note: No, we couldn't do this in 250 words either.)

Dartmouth College

Interested in applying to the Ivy League university in Hanover, New Hampshire? Dartmouth is asking prospective students to reveal some of their personality secrets. "When you meet someone for the first time, what do you want them to know about you, but generally don't tell them?" reads one question.

Honorable mention: "Every name tells a story: Tell us about your name — any name: first, middle, last, nickname — and its origin."

University of Virginia

Sometimes the hardest questions to answer are also the shortest in terms of word length. "What's your favorite word and why?" asks the University of Virginia's Admissions Office of its applicants. (They are encouraged to answer in roughly 250 words.)

Honorable mention: "To tweet or not to tweet?"

Majors. Engineers top the list of the highest lifetime career earners: Study

Want to be rich one day? Consider majoring in some form of engineering.

According to new data from the Hamilton Project — which researches proposals that promote economic advancement — nine fields of engineering hold the Top 7 spots on its list of professions with the highest average total career earnings.

Chemical engineers came first on the list, earning an average total of 2.11 million dollars. They were followed by aerospace engineers, energy engineers and computer engineers.

But what about those students who don't gravitate toward engineering? Coming in at 10th on the list is computer science, a subject that has gotten increasingly popular among undergraduates in recent years. Many colleges speculate that students — who grew up hearing that there were not enough American computer programmers out there for all of the job openings available — have decided to try to fill some of those (fairly lucrative) opportunities themselves.

It's also important to note

Engineering can be a field that pays off. / COLOURBOX

The list

Majors with the highest average lifetime earnings:

- Chemical engineering: $2.11 million
- Aerospace engineering: $2.06 million
- Energy engineering: $2.03 million
- Computer engineering: $2.02 million that this list doesn't include students who went on to pursue a graduate degree. Economics, biochemistry and biology were tops for those who went to grad school, with many biology majors becoming doctors in the end.

The Hamilton Project researchers also note the huge advantage college grads have over the general population. "The typical graduate in every college major will out-earn the typical high school graduate by at least $200,000 over the career," they wrote.

Discomfort in the workplace doesn't need to be negative

Personal growth.

Stepping out of your comfort zone can be beneficial for bosses and new hires alike.

When describing their dream position, job-seekers often speak about finding a company in which they feel comfortable. In the provocatively titled new book "The Discomfort Zone: How Leaders Turn Difficult Conversations Into Breakthroughs," management coach Marcia Reynolds argues that feeling too comfortable can stop employees from evolving.

"We don't learn anything if we don't allow ourselves to be uncomfortable, so we stay stuck in seeing things and doing things the same way," Reynolds explains. "I always say that in the moment of discomfort, where we become uncertain of who we are and how we see the world, is the opportunity to grow."

Reynolds says that taking someone out of their comfort zone is also key to breaking the patterns and defense mechanisms that often stop people from reaching their potential.

We asked Reynolds to share more about how managers and employees can get the most out of her techniques.

Treat your co-workers like they're your equals

Taking criticism is tough for anyone, so it's important to stay focused on tasks rather than personalities. "When I criticize you, your brain shuts down automatically, so that doesn't work," she says. "You're working with people who are your partners; they're not your children."

The best managers want their teams to grow. / STOCKBYTE

The way to create lasting change, says Reynolds, is to ask questions, get to know the people you work with and build a deeper level of trust. "If I can ask you the right questions and you can discover yourself, not only do you learn but actually in the brain it embeds and you commit to any change or behavior," she explains. "It's more efficient leadership. I want to help you think differently — that's the approach."

when they are upset. Although it might be nerve-wracking to think about, Reynolds encourages everyone to share their feelings with their bosses.

"Sometimes people have no idea what kind of impact they have until somebody tells them," she says. "It's really the courageous person that goes to the boss and says, 'I don't like when you talk to me like that.'"

Although it may be hard to believe, Reynolds says most bosses she's advised say they were ultimately glad for the feedback. "They're human too, and they want to know the impact they have on people."

Realize what it means to be a leader

"A lot of times leaders do the right thing but they don't have the right feelings — and people can see through that," says Reynolds.

She adds that everyone wants to feel respected and valued in the workplace. Taking the time to get to know your co-workers and helping them move up the ladder goes a long way.

"If you think about it — in your life, the people who made a difference for you are the ones that made you see yourself and the world differently," says Reynolds.

Relaxation

Most Americans haven't taken a vacation day this year

It's well-documented that Americans generally take fewer and shorter vacations than almost everyone else. But a newly released study illustrates just how vacation-starved most of us are.

The travel news startup Skift found that almost 51 percent of Americans have yet to take a vacation day in 2014. And those who are taking a break from the office aren't leaving for long — only 15 percent of those surveyed say they've taken more than 10 days off this year.

Here's another startling finding from the survey: Regardless of age, women are the ones taking the least amount of vacation.

Have a little respect for photo theft

Re: 'Jennifer Lawrence's scolding rings false' (Metro, Oct. 9) Warren Tochtermann's letter is a little self-serving, since he needs to justify his pervy behavior. Whether someone is famous, she has the right to share her photos with only those she chooses. Jennifer Lawrence and others didn't post their photos on an open-source website, but rather a site that is password-protected.

Do you, Tochtermann, or the other creeps who indulged in prurient, lecherous, corrupt behavior in viewing photos that were not intended for you, use online banking, ever bought anything online or posted something? If your identity is stolen or your banking information taken do we say, "Too bad, you shouldn't have used the Web?" Perhaps you live under a rock (or in your parents' basement) and don't realize that Jennifer Lawrence doesn't need a publicity stunt. Grow up and try learning RESPECT, you creep.

Proper precautions ensure privacy

Re: 'No better than a Peeping Tom' (Metro, Oct. 10-12) Caroline Hanley and the other indignant folks who believe that anyone should be able to do whatever they want at any time without regard to consequences are seriously deluded. To prove my point, I ask them if they have the right not to be robbed. They do? Well then, don't lock your door when you leave your house or your car when you park. After all, you have the "right." Or, I ask them if they would walk down the street with $1,000 pinned to their chests. No? Why not? You have the "right" to do that without being robbed. Logic is so alien to these utopian fantasists — as if because they believe it, everyone else should, too. Get real.

Patriots hold off Bills, take division lead

NFL. New England improved to 4-2 on the season thanks to a 37-22 victory over the Bills in upstate New York.

For the second straight week, Tom Brady looked like Tom Brady and the Patriots offense beat up a top-ranked defense.

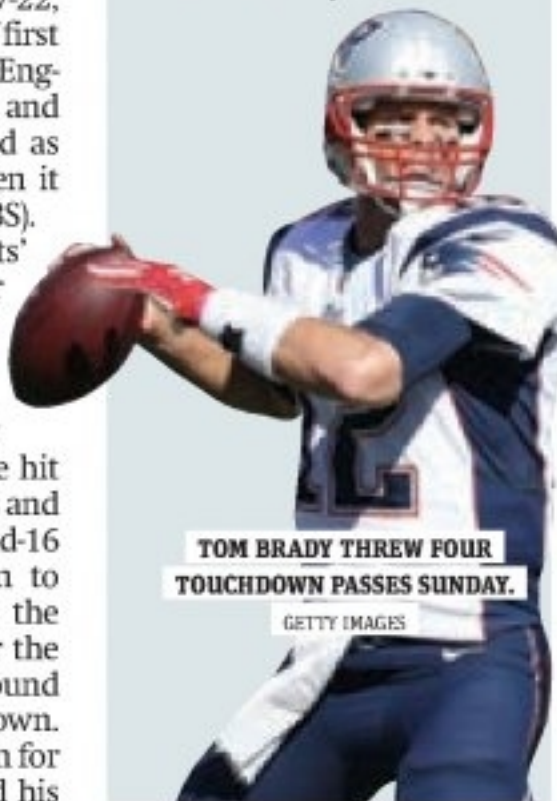

Brady found Brandon LaFell for a pair of touchdowns in the fourth quarter Sunday in Orchard Park, New York, as the Pats held off the Bills, 37-22, and took sole possession of first place in the AFC East. New England is 4-2 on the season and can add to its division lead as soon as this Thursday when it hosts the Jets (8:25 p.m., CBS).

Buffalo cut the Patriots' lead to eight with under six minutes remaining, and the Pats had to start a drive from their own 7-yard line — but Brady solved the Bills defense. He hit Julian Edelman for 20 yards and then dismissed a third-and-16 with a 17-yard connection to Rob Gronkowski to keep the drive alive. Two plays after the Gronkowski catch, Brady found LaFell for a 56-yard touchdown. The score cemented the win for the Pats as Brady improved his record to 23-2 against the Bills.

At certain points, the Patriots looked as though they were on the verge of blowing out the Bills when Brady's highlight reel 43-yard touchdown pass to a lunging Brian Tyms put the Pats up 20-7 early in the third quarter. But a third quarter touchdown run by Fred Jackson and Chris Hogan's eight-yard TD grab from Kyle Orton in the fourth kept the Pats honest.

Brady finished the day with four touchdown passes, zero interceptions and 361 yards through the air. Gronkowski, LaFell and Edelman all finished with over 90 yards receiving.

Buffalo turned the ball over three times. Neither team had much success on the ground as the Pats finished with just 50 yards rushing and Buffalo finished with just 68 yards rushing.

NFL. Key players go down to injury in win at Buffalo

The Patriots were ravaged by injury last season. Up until Sunday, however, their 2014 injury reports were relatively clean. Unfortunately for the Pats, many big names went down against the Bills and they will be looking to fill many holes going forward.

It is feared that linebacker Jerod Mayo could be lost for the season after he was carted off the field with a knee injury. Mayo suffered a pec injury exactly one year ago today and it caused him to miss the remainder of the 2013 season.

Running back Stevan Ridley also went down with a knee injury and did not return. He is scheduled to have an MRI on Monday, according to ESPN. Guard Dan Connolly suffered a head injury and tight end Rob Gronkowski fell awkwardly in the second half. Gronkowski did return to the game. METRO

Browns coast, Jets struggle

NFL. Cleveland is very much alive in the AFC North through six weeks of football.

It's mid-October, and the Cleveland Browns are above .500. Cleveland (3-2) stunned the rival Steelers (3-3) Sunday, winning 31-10 at home as Brian Hoyer threw for 217 yards. Jordan Cameron's 51-yard touchdown reception from Hoyer in the second quarter put the Browns up 14-3 and they never looked back, owning a 31-3 lead late in the fourth quarter.

Ravens 48, Buccaneers 17
Joe Flacco certainly looked like the quarterback that led Baltimore to a title two years ago on Sunday as he shredded the Buccaneers defense. Flacco threw a whopping five touchdown passes in the first half alone and Baltimore owned a 38-0 lead by halftime. Justin Forsett added 111 yards on the ground for the 4-2 Ravens.
